What skills should a geek kid learn?

Published by Martin under Family, Hacking, Social Networking

In a few weeks HacKid will be coming up in Boston at the Micro attend with my family didn't quite work out, but it did get me to two boys to master before they're too old to learn to learn anything I figure is about 15. I don't mean the stuff they learn in school the skills they're going to need to survive on a daily basis. I want technical and non-technical. Since I've recently started playing one of the first of these skills, but I turned to the wisdom of Twitter compilation of the list I started and some of the suggestions I got. Here you go:

Here you go:

- Lock picking (physical security being taught at HacKid)
- How to social engineer a password from someone
- Fix a printer (or at least replace the paper/cartridge and pull it out)
- Martial arts/Self-defense (also being taught at HacKid)
- Electronics/soldering/circuit boards (I'd have to learn more about this)
- Amateur (Ham) radio
- Fast reading/Critical thinking (they've got the first handled, but)
- Conflict management
- How to build a tree fort
- How to build a home network
