

Lack Lissauer, jack.lissauer@nasa.gov

To be presented at Kavli Institute for Theoretical Physics at the University of California @ Santa Barbara

Kepler & Planet Formation

Kepler has vastly increased our knowledge of planets and planetary systems located close to stars. The new data shows surprising results for planetary abundances, planetary spacings and the distribution of planets on a mass-radius diagram. The implications of these results for theories of planet formation will be discussed.